24-Pin for the Budget-Minded

Okidata has released the Okimate 240, a 24-pin home office printer with features usually found on more expensive printers.

The Okimate 240 allows you to switch between letterhead and continuous forms with the touch of a button. It also features a built-in push tractor and a power-assisted paper loader which automatically positions single sheets at the top of the page. Top and rear feeds allow you to use different types of paper stock and envelopes.

The 240's front control panel has an LED display and allows you to change fonts and character pitch and activate the paper-parking feature with the touch of a button. Courier and Gothic fonts are resident. A utility mode is available for rough drafts or spreadsheets. The fonts can be altered to double height, double width, outline, and shadow options.

Other features on the Epson LQ-compatible printer are a parallel interface and a 200-million-character printhead.

The Okimate 240 has a retail price of $529.

Sunken Treasure

Electronic Zoo has released Treasure Trap, a strategy game for the IBM PC and compatibles, Atari ST, and Amiga computers.

You can explore 100 rooms in the sunken shell of the Esmeralda where a priceless cargo of solid gold bars rests undisturbed. To find the gold, you must solve puzzles, locate keys, and search for additional air tanks to stay alive. Your quest is made difficult because the waters around the vessel are patrolled by poisonous jellyfish and electric eels, as well as some creatures you may not have seen before. Make friends with groupers and red snappers, and your exploration becomes easier and safer.

The retail price of Treasure Trap is $39.95. The MS-DOS version, available on 5¼- or 3½-inch disks, supports VGA, MCGA, EGA, Tandy 16-color, and 4-color CGA.
